

What is the function of the control group in an experiment?

- A To serve as a source of backup subjects.
- B To increase the number of participants.
- C To serve as a standard of comparison.
- D To prevent sampling error.

Ideally a control group should differ from the experimental group only with respect to the variable being studied.

Answer C.

Starr·C·01·10 2002-10-23