

How does oxygen move into and out of red blood cells?

- A It is actively transported across the cell membrane.
- B It is passively transported across the cell membrane.
- C It diffuses across the cell membrane.
- D It cannot move across the cell membrane.

Small uncharged molecules, such as oxygen and carbon dioxide, can diffuse across the lipid bilayer of a plasma membrane.

Answer C.

Starr C'05'08 2002-10-23