

According to Darwin's theory of evolution by natural selection, what process leads to changes in populations over time?

- A differential survival and reproduction
- B catastrophic extinction
- C inheritance of acquired characteristics

Natural selection refers to differential survival and reproduction among members of a population whose members vary in one or more traits.

Answer A.

Starr C'16'03 2002-10-23