

What is the function of the control group in an experiment?

- A To serve as a source of backup subjects.
 - B To increase the number of participants.
 - C To serve as a standard of comparison.
 - D To prevent sampling error.
-

Ideally a control group should differ from the experimental group only with respect to the variable being studied.

Answer C.