

What allows scientists to assign a fungal species, such as this Eupenicillium into a particular fungal class?

- A observation of its mycelium
- B observation of asexual spores
- C observation of predatory behavior
- D observation of sexual spores

As soon as investigators discover that a species does produce sexual spores, that fungus is classified on the basis of the type of spores.

Answer D.